FINAL FOOTBALL GAME SATURDAY

Gould Academy will wind up its 1939 football season by entertaining their neighboring state rivals, Berlin High. The local eleven showed considerable improvement in their 13-0 win over Wilton Academy and although Gardner Smith has been lost to the team by the 20-year age limit, the players feel that they can give a good account of themselves in the finale.

Last year the New Hampshire boys threw a scare into the local fans by way of the air when they managed two touchdowns in a row. Gould came back strong in the last period however and won out by a 33-13 score. The game this year however will be another story with a "nip and tuck" battle anticipated and the winning team the one that can capitalize on any breaks it might receive.

This game is scheduled to start promptly at 2 p. m. with Bornstein, Gibsen, and Fortunato doing the officiating.

William Allen White Appeals for Support for "Cash and Carry" Plan

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Heading a nation-wide Non-Partisan Committee for Peace through Revision of the Neutrality Law, William Allen White, noted author and editor of the Emporia (Kansas) Gazette, issued a statement warning that the course recommended by the extreme isolationists would throw the country into panic and a deeper depression that may shock the country more than war.

Mr. White's Committee, which includes men and women prominent as leaders in religion, education, and the agricultural and business life of the nation, is working to support President Roosevelt's stand for peace and the proposed revision of the Neutrality Law being debated in Congress. Mr. White has enlisted both Democrats and Republicans, and other political leaders, to work with his Committee.

"There is no royal road to peace," Mr. White said in a recent statement. "If we keep the extreme isolationist position our economic maladjustment will throw this country into panic and a deeper depression which may shock us more than war. If we keep the present embargo law our ships and sailors carrying the materials of war—steel, oil, wheat, cotton, and commodities needed to win a war—will be subject to attack on the high seas. Similar attacks led us into war under President Wilson."

"If we take the cash and carry plan we are in danger of becoming the world's target by reason of our position as the world's merchant. But the risk is less if we do not allow our American ships to take the materials and munitions of war to either belligerent."

"This cash and carry law is America's peaceful contribution to the world's inevitable struggle that is gathering on the shores of western Europe. We are not risking our flesh and blood. We are not bartering the lives of our boys by opening our shores to the democracies who come asking for the weapons to protect their rights, and food with which to fight famine. We are, instead, building up our own defenses, shielding our own world, the world we love in this western hemisphere, from the invader's army, defending our own homes, making our own liberties secure."

The Non-Partisan Committee, which Mr. White heads, has its national headquarters at 8 West 40th Street, New York City, and affiliated groups in more than thirty states.

Mr. White has appealed to individuals and groups wishing to help the work of the Committee, to write to him direct at the national headquarters.

40 YEARS AGO in the NEWS

Nov. 1, 1899

For several months the Grand Trunk station at this place has been given over into the hands of carpenters, and though Station Agent Chandler and Baggage master Barker have doubtless been obliged to put up with some inconvenience, the marked improvements that have been made can but be appreciated by them now.

The trustee building at Hebron Academy was burned last night. There were some 60 boarders in the building at the time of the fire, all of whom escaped without injury.

"THEY TELL ME"

If you have been reading the auto ads these last few weeks perhaps you have noticed most of these new 1940 models have got sealed beam headlights. Some fellow must have developed a supersales streak the way they all fell for it. But whatever they did I don't think they named it right. However they sealed that beam they didn't seal it in. It gets in your own eyes so you can't see clearly. In fact you can see nothing. You may remember back a few years some of these smart fellows that weren't in the model T class used to kick and suffer terribly over the little Ford's lights. Now these big nice cars have lights that are a darned sight worse. Just try to walk on side up Main St. when some fellow with his 1940 car parks and leaves the lights turned up. If you could see to turn around it would be safer to go around some other way. Yes, probably this is "sour grapes," because my car will have to go me a spell yet. And perhaps I am barking up the wrong tree. Maybe the lights wouldn't be so bad if the lucky driver knew enough to dim 'em a little when he is meeting me or has stopped his car and doesn't need his new streamlined lights to see with. Frank Brown

The SNAPSHOT GUILD
FOOTBALL PICTURES

Striking football shots are easy at practice sessions—real action. If you have a fast shutter, posed action with slower cameras. Make a collection this season!

THERE'S drama for your camera
In this season's football activities—and, strangely enough, some of the finest, most striking football action pictures are the easiest to take.

Naturally, you'll take your camera to the games, so as to get a record of what happened. But for really dramatic shots, the place to go is the practice sessions, where you'll be more free to move about, and can get closer to the players.

If you have a fine camera with fast lens and speedy shutter, of course you can shoot genuine rapid action—such as in the picture above. That leap would call for a shutter speed of at least 1/200 second—if you caught the player at the peak—and preferably 1/400 or 1/500, to be really on the safe side.

But, even if your shutter is too slow for such shooting, don't feel handicapped. In leisure moments during practice, or after the season, most players will be glad to pose for you as if in action. And action poses can be surprisingly realistic.

Here are two hints. First, keep the camera near the ground, tilted slightly upward. This low position makes the figures tower dramatically—and also yields a good sky background. Second, use a color filter if you possibly can. A medium yellow filter will be best—it gives good tone quality to the sky, brings out whatever clouds there are, and the exposure increase required is very slight.

See if you can't build up a good album of striking football shots this season. Gridiron shooting makes a splendid camera specialty—and the pictures are distinctly out of the "routine snapshot" class.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

TODAY ONLY: $5 BILLS FOR $1.98

MANY times, on a wager, men have tried to sell $5 bills for as little as $1.98—legitimate $5 bills worth $5 anywhere. They have usually failed.

The reason is simple to see: Lack of confidence.

Their proposition sounded too good to be true, failed to arouse the confidence of the prospects, who were afraid to buy.

No one trusted the seller because no one knew him. He might be a counterfeiter. Who knows? He might have some trick up his sleeve. Who knows? Better have nothing at all to do with him.

Confidence is the mainspring of business. Without it no business can succeed and no product can be sold, because before any one of us is willing to part with a penny, we must have confidence that that which we are going to buy will give us value received.

Confidence is not a matter which can be bought. It must be earned. It is a process of growth. The idea of confidence grows from one customer to the next one. It gives vitality to everything about a business.

When confidence enters into a business transaction, everything about it becomes pleasant. But whenever confidence is absent, no amount of any other qualities can take its place.

You have often bought something from someone you did not know, say a solicitor who succeeded in taking away your money at the door. Will you ever see him again? Will you get the goods you have paid for? Was it a miniature swindle? You wonder and worry.

You spend hours in painful doubt. Perhaps everything turned out all right. Even so, the profit went out of the transaction when you had to worry about getting your money's worth. Buy goods that are advertised from merchants who advertise. There lies confidence.

One of the chief services of newspaper advertising to consumers is that it denotes which merchants or products are worthy of confidence.

Because newspaper publishers are so jealous of their advertising columns and are quick to reject anything which does not live up to their standards, readers know that if a thing is regularly advertised in the newspaper it is worthy of their confidence.

As a matter of fact, the appearance of an advertisement in a newspaper is recommendation of the character and quality of the goods being advertised.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—On board the Nord-Express, bound for Ostend, Dr. David Jebb is looking for America. With him is five-year-old Cynthia Thatcher, his ten-year-old son, and a former classmate of David's, Bill Gaines, who is on his way to America. David is a surgeon, and he is looking for a wife. He is looking for a wife who is a native of America, and who is a native of America. He is looking for a wife who is a native of America, and who is a native of America.

CHAPTER II—David receives a minor injury while on the train, and a sympathetic passenger pours brandy down his throat. That is sufficient to kindle the desire for liquor. Jebb takes a drink with him, leaves the train, and begins drinking. Bill Gaines, the old schoolmate, remains on board the train.

CHAPTER III—A strange incantation which Jebb from a dull stupor. His brain is a fog, he looks around, seeing a strange woman, dressed in flowing robes and heavily veiled. In broken English she tells him he is in Uskub, that her name is Miruma, and that she will take care of him. She had not seen Cynthia, who is missing. Later Miruma tells him she is the wife of a Pasha, but wife in name only. The Pasha has another wife—a true wife whom he loves dearly. Miruma means nothing to the Pasha. Jebb is a surgeon, she tells him, and a powerful man in Uskub. Akel Bey, whose son is slowly dying.

CHAPTER IV—Jebb moves to a hotel, seeking the lost Cynthia. He asks no questions. However, he calls at the home of Akel Bey, who lives on his son, and saves the boy's life, thus earning the family's deep gratitude.

CHAPTER V—Jebb is surprised by a visit from the Pasha, who has heard of his prowess as a surgeon. He wants Jebb to examine the wife he loves, Nahir Hanum, who is ill. David examines her, decides an operation is necessary. The Pasha fears for her life, and Nahir Hanum is also frightened, but David tells him her life will be lost without prompt attention.

CHAPTER VI

Nahir Hanum was too weak to be very curious. The ebbing of her life had brought its own anesthesia to soul and body. Her chief emotion was a dim wonder, like moonlight wavering through a fog. A part of her was detached from the rest of her.

The soft-brained Miruma was far more terrified than she. He stood looking off womanly tenderness and whispering to himself to be a man, lest Jebb despise him.

The doctor selected a scalpel of medium size and holding it like a violin bow, drew it across the skin, which parted and drew back like silk. Then he incised the thin straw-like covering of the fascia of the greater breast muscle, and pressed the blade through its stout fabric.

"Some retractors," he said.

Miruma felt the room rocking.

"The retractors, quick!" Jebb repeated sharply, and he fitted them into the opposite edges of the muscle to hold it back.

"The forceps," he commanded.

"And a clamp."

Clamping one end of a severed vein, he picked up the other with the forceps.

"Hold this!" He gave the forceps into Miruma's white hand, while he snatched up a catgut thread, looped it over the mouth of an artery, and knotted it with a dexterity a sailor would have envied. And so he did with all the small arteries he was compelled to cut.

"Give me a couple of toothed forceps, quick."

Miruma handed him a carilage knife.

"Hell," growled Jebb as he snatched two forceps himself, and delicately fastened one of them in the wall of the pericardium.

"Hold this, and be careful," and he put the forceps in Miruma's grip.

"Don't move."

He seized the wall a little lower down in the other forceps, transferred them to his left hand, with his right reached for the scissors and made a slight incision, which he lengthened a trifle with a probe-pointed knife.

Nothing result so delighted him as he called out to the waiter: "Bring me a glass of brandy." Then he turned to please you, old friend, and the yellow devils were "em scatter!"

With every faculty at his task of reconstruction was Jebb. He had come safely through a thousand dangers, and he breathed deep.

It was a long and busy week before Jebb felt that Nahir Hanum could safely be entrusted to the care of Miruma and Miruma, though he had schooled them in all the tasks and problems that were likely to arise. Meanwhile Gani Bey was flourishing in the radiant household of his father and mother. He felt that he had a right to set about his own business.

Jebb called upon the Pasha and after as much delicacy of palaver as his curt soul could manage, he broached the hateful subject of compensation.

"Your servant can never repay you for your service by mere paras and piastres, Jebb Effendim, but may he ask what you would consider a fair recompense?"

His smile turned to a grimace of pain as Jebb answered crisply:

"Twelve hundred pounds."

"Mazallah! It is the price of the wife herself."

Having led him into the noose, Jebb tightened it.

"I will throw off one thousand pounds of my bill, Pasha, if you will release Miruma Hanim and restore her nekayah."

"You ask me to—divorce my wife?"

"Your other wife."

"But, why-why? Do you want to marry her?"

"If I wanted to marry her, should I be leaving Uskub tomorrow, forever?"

"You leave Uskub forever! What of my poor sick wife—my Bash-Kadin? You will leave her to die?"

"The best thing I can think of to cure your wife, Pasha, would be the news that she no longer had a young and beautiful rival. If you went to her, and said, 'You are my only wife now,' it would be better than any medicine I could prescribe."

The Pasha was breathing deeply and his eye was softening.

"And," Jebb added, "you will save one thousand pounds of my fee."

"You think my wife Nahir is well enough to leave?"

"With the instructions I have given him, Miruma Effendi can bring her back to health in two or three months."

"And you truly think it will help her to recover if I inform her that I shall put away the gift wife?"

"It will help more than all my skill."

"Then your servant will obey your instructions in everything."

"Miruma Hanim shall have her talaq and her nekayah."

"On my honor, and as soon as the court will grant the decree," and once more: "You are sure you are leaving Uskub forever?"

"Tomorrow without fail. If you could have my money at my hotel."

"It will be there, effendim. For your skill, I shall pray Allah also to reward you. For your journey, Allah emanet ooloni!"

Jebb had, indeed, resolved to leave Uskub forever, and Miruma forever. The fierce demands of his duties to the lost child cried out against him for his neglect, though he felt absolved to a degree by the necessity of earning funds and saving the lives perishing at his very feet. But now there was no further excuse to give his conscience.

He had come to know Miruma better, through the veil, the actual veil she wore and the impalpable yet impenetrable veil her self-respect, her duty, the danger of their situation drew about her. And he had come to love her and desire her with a passion his heart had never dreamed itself capable of entertaining.

He planned to hurry forth to hunt the lost child. He dreamed that he stumbled upon her without delay. He imagined himself telegraphing Miruma to join him and go with him to America as his wife.

And then his thanks choked in his throat. A chill hand seemed to reach from the fog and throttle him. It was his curse that had brought him to Uskub with infinite disgrace, with a deep shame that he had concealed only by cowardly silence.

His curse forbade him to marry any woman, least of all Miruma.

He thought long and fiercely over his farewell to Miruma. He wrote many letters and tore them in pieces. Worn out and nauseated with life, he dashed off and sealed the curtest message of all, with no hint of the love that neither had expressed in a word, and both had understood with all their hearts.

Miruma Hanim—Madame:

I leave for Salonica by the next train. I shall hunt for the child until I find her. I will let you know when I do. Fehmi Pasha has promised me on his honor that he will grant you at once a talaq and restore your nekayah in full. I should like to be assured of this. You might send me word, if it is not too much trouble. My permanent address will be the Union Bank, I Graben 13, Vienna (Viyana), Austria.

With all good wishes,

Yours faithfully,

DAVID JEBB

CHAPTER VII

Salonica, the Hot Springs of Ancient Greece, seemed pretty ancient to the Yankee surgeon who came in an express train and took a cab to the Grand Hotel d'Angleterre.

Hellwald and the British consul had helped him over the important matter of his missing papers, had provided him with a substitute for his lost passport and a teskere, or license to travel; had coached him in the important intricacies of Turkish machinery and given him cordial letters to the representatives of Great Britain and Austria in Salonica.

When he left the train he was compelled to have his teskere vided by a Turkish official, who took it in charge until he should leave the town again.

"Will the effendi look through his papers and see if by chance he is holding another teskere of mine?" he asked.

He did not fail to slip a little baksheesh under the documents on the desk. The recorder ransacked his files graciously.

"Daveet Jebb Effendi could not have passed through Salonica—at least not openly and legally."

Jebb dissipated the menace of this suggestion with a further insinuation of baksheesh and hastened to his cab.

At the Austrian consulate Jebb was received with the distinction due his recommendations as a friend with him.

"You're in a fine fix, old man, and you oughtn't to be of it."

"I'm always alone," said Jebb grimly.

"Well, I'll do my best to make Salonica an exception. There's not much to occupy an Anglo-Saxon in Salonica unless you're interested in politics. We rather feel we're sitting on dynamite. The Young Turks are in power but they have an Angean stable to clean up, and the old Sultan isn't dead yet."

"What have they done with the old Sultan?"

"Why, haven't you heard? He's here—here in Salonica. Fact! He is a kind of prisoner de luxe, settled in a wonderful villa built ten years ago by an Italian for the Allatini family. Now the government has turned it into a gilded cage for the ex-Sultan. They didn't quite like to treat him as we did Charles I, but he's a problem, and no mistake. The old tarantula may pop up any day and there are people enough eager to help him back to his web."

"But let's not talk Turkish politics. I hear nothing else all day. Let's go to a cafe chantant."

"Anything to get my mind off my troubles."

The admission was only two piastres or ten cents apiece. The price seemed small till the musicians began, then it seemed excessive.

Banbury chose a table and the waiter brought them coffee. Banbury rejected it with horror and ordered Scotch and soda, in which Jebb begged to be excused from joining him.

At a table in front of him, Jebb noticed a fat neck and short, bristly poll of distinctly French extraction. Eventually their owner turned his face, glanced at Jebb, stared, turned away, turned back, looked uneasy, angry, pugnacious, puzzled.

Jebb wondered what ailed the man. He was sure he had never seen him before. At length the stranger rose and left the hall, and Jebb gave his soul to the Miserere from "Il Trovatore."

He was absorbed so deeply in the music that he failed to notice at first the arrival of a police officer who spoke deferentially to Banbury. Banbury was melting sympathetically under the influence of Scotch and Verdi, but he was instant with an Englishman's rage at any invasion of his privacy.

Jebb turned in surprise and found the Turkish officer regarding him with a piercing scrutiny, which Jebb answered with the clear-eyed innocence of ignorance. He caught a word here and there and gleaned that the conversation had to do with a French hotelkeeper named Moosoo Carolet, some other person named Pierpont, and an unpaid bill.

Banbury grew more and more furious as he thundered Turkish with a curious British intonation. The officer grew more and more humble and finally withdrew in confusion with much apology and many a salaam.

When he had gone, Banbury said, "This is the most ghastly country in God's world. What do you suppose that jackass of a policeman wanted? It would be no end funny if it weren't so disgustingly impertinent. It seems that some silly ass of a French hotelkeeper here had a guest who lived very royally for a few days then skipped without stopping to pay the shot. This jackass sees you and thinks you are Pierpont. He goes to the police and orders your arrest. The officer came to me with apologies for throwing a friend of mine into a dungeon as a common thief, but I sent him about his business."

"That's mighty nice of you."

"Don't think any more about it. Have another cigar and a cup of coffee, and let us hope that soprano is really not so unhappy as she sounds."

"By the way, what was the name of the hotel?"

"The Grand Hotel de—something or other I don't remember. Don't think of it again, I beg you."

But Jebb thought of it without rest. At length Banbury rose impatiently. The Scotch had made him drowsy, but he blamed the Italian music.

"I can't stand any more of this caterwaul, can you? What do you say to our getting out? I'll drop you at your hotel, eh?"

"Thank you, I think I'll see it through."

"Very well, I'll wait if you want to."

"Please don't let me keep you."

Banbury insisted on Jebb's dining with him.

"I think so, effendim," smiled the Turk, shaking like a vat of jelly: "the train to Constantinople runs three times every week, and the next train leaves tomorrow."

Another twenty-four hours of inaction! It seemed that he could not tolerate the delay. He was finished with Salonica, so impatient to be quit of it that he was tempted to set out for Constantinople on foot. He actually climbed the steep hillside, through the Turkish quarter.

Young girls hung about the fountains filling their jugs, and a dozen times Jebb saw some profile, some little form that suggested Cynthia. But he was all too well assured that she was not in Salonica.

He kept walking and late in the afternoon he reached the southern limits of the city, where houses were few and fields broad. In the distance he saw a splendid palace in a great garden surrounded by a high wall. He skirted the edges and continued on his way till it began to grow dark. Seeing that the sunset was purpling Mt. Olympus and that night would soon be upon him, he turned back.

He was startled by distant cries. He saw people running here and there. Suddenly a little veiled figure came out of the twilight and the shrubbery close to him. Jebb thought that some poor Turkish wife was fleeing from murder or persecution. He determined to offer her his protection. He ran towards her shouting in English. As he came up the little veiled figure drew two revolvers and fired at him.

The bullets whirled past his ears. He would have been glad to retreat but his impetus carried him forward, and it was momentum rather than any foolhardy bravery that led him to leap at the murderous lady and wrestle with her for her revolvers, which continued to spit fire in a very feminine way and fortunately with feminine aim.

In the highly indecorous wrestle for life, the fugitive's thick yashmak was torn loose, and Jebb saw to his infinite amazement that the little lady wore a heavy beard, and was a little old man.

The captive kept uttering violent things in a violent way; then he began to plead shrilly. But Jebb had lost his Turkish along with his breath and his patience; and he simply held his prisoner fast, till the pursuers arrived. They gazed with awe at the scene, pouring forth horrified sentences in which Jebb caught the word "Padishahi!"

He nearly swooned as it came over him that the little old gentleman in the disheveled ferije and veil was no less—and no more—than Abdul Hamid I.
